INTRODUCTION

Singrauli Industrial and Natural Hub

Singrauli is a city in the northeastern part of the Indian state of Madhya Pradesh. It is situated on the border of Uttar Pradesh and Madhya Pradesh, and is known for its abundant natural resources, including coal, water, and forests.

The city was originally a small village, but it has undergone rapid development in recent years due to the establishment of several large thermal power plants, which have made it a hub for power generation in India. Singrauli is also home to the largest coalfield in India, the Singrauli Coalfield, which is spread over an area of about 2,200 square kilometers.

Apart from its industrial importance, Singrauli is also known for its scenic beauty, with several hills and forests surrounding the city. The Tippi Jhariya Dam on the Rihand River, which is the main source of water for the region, is also a popular tourist attraction.

Singrauli has a diverse population, with people from different parts of India living and working in the city.
